

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

A piece of work such as this cannot be completed without support.

Over the past four and a half years I have been very fortunate to have been guided through this work by an excellent supervision team. For this reason I owe acknowledgement to my supervisors Professor Elisabeth Davenport and Professor Ann Macintosh, to my PhD panel chair Dr Phil Turner, and to my external advisor Professor David Ellis. I am also grateful to Dr Keith Horton who showed interest in the work as it developed.

Scott Raeburn and Professor Jon Kerridge both provided support as departmental heads at the beginning and end of the time spent on the research. I am particularly grateful for their understanding of my need to immerse myself deeply in the work at crucial times in order to push it forward. Other colleagues who have helped make difference to the speed at which the work progressed include Katie Brown, Kathy Buckner, Brian Davison, Leanne McNab, Katharine Taylor and Kenny Walker.

This work would be nothing without the case study. I am therefore indebted to Melanie Goody for providing access to KPMG, to Peter Chivers for authorising the case study, to Iain Simpson and the other interviewees for willingly giving up their time to discuss the knowledge management implementation at KPMG, and to the KMG staff at Dorset Rise who made me feel so welcome.

I am fortunate in having a group of friends and relations who indulged my desire to talk about the processes that led to the production of the thesis. They are: Dr Karen Atkinson; Dr Bill Buchanan; Dr Vikki Entwistle; Jerry Gardner; Jonathan Gordon-Till; Dr Judith Hall; Grant Jeffrey; Véronique Johnston; Dr Paul Lynch; Dr Shaun Moores; Dr Jacinda Read; and Nick Young.

Two Richards at opposite ends of the country deserve thanks. Richard Hall furnished me with a base in London during extensive periods of data collection. Richard Gollin provided accommodation when time needed to be taken off in order to give work (and life) a sense of perspective.

My Barrington, Hall, Read and Toulmin relations have patiently watched this work come together. I would like to recognise their support.

There are two people without whom this work would ever have been started, never mind completed. It is difficult to put into words the debt that is owed to Professor Elisabeth Davenport not as a supervisor, but as a mentor and friend. Her faith in my ability and continued encouragement has pushed me to achieve goals of which I did not believe I was capable. I hope that in the future I may be able to do the same for my junior colleagues. The other anchor of this thesis is Tim Read. He knows the reasons why.
